DUKE ELLINGTON (1899-1974)
For over a half a century, Duke, the piano player, the composer, the orchestrator has never ceased recording his own music. Everyone will agree with the fact that the most "modern" versions of his compositions have been released by CBS between 1950 and 1960.

Throughout along the twentieth century, Duke has been to jazz what Stravinsky has been to classical music, and what Picasso has been to paintings.

Clark Terry, Harold Baker, Cat Anderson, Francis Williams, Ray Nance, trumpet. Quentin Jackson, Britt Woodman, John Sanders, trombone. Jimmy Hamilton, Russell Procope, Johnny Hodges, Paul Gonsalves, Harry Carney, saxophone. Sam Woodyard, drums. Jimmy Woode, bass. Duke Ellington, piano. Soloist: Nance. One of Duke Ellington's major secrets and qualities was his ability to keep his most important musicians with him and this during his entire career, and what a career!

From the ragtime era up to and including the post bebop era, Duke was able to stay modern and popular. As Benny Golson once said "Duke did everything and did it before everyone else". Duke's harmonic conception made his orchestra sound bigger and fuller than the majority of the other bands existing. One of Duke's prides and a legitimate one, was his ability to write music that became almost instantly immortal; he could write standards! He could write popular music. At one time "Do nothing 'till you hear from me" was the no. 1 song in America, no small achievement!

What you will find in this collection are almost all standards and are by far the best versions recorded by the Duke Ellington orchestra.
